

Relief for Non-U.S. Investment Advisers: SEC Clarifies the Extraterritorial Limits of the New Private Fund Adviser Rules

August 29, 2023

On August 23, 2023, the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (“SEC”) adopted its highly anticipated new rules and amendments to existing rules under the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 (“Advisers Act”) impacting private fund advisers (“Private Fund Adviser Rules” or the “Rules”).^[1] In a welcome development, the SEC confirmed in its Adopting Release that in most cases the Rules would not apply to advisers located outside of the U.S. (“offshore advisers”), but also clarified that certain provisions would apply in certain circumstances.

Please refer to our recent summary of the new Rules for more information. The Private Fund Adviser Rules include the following five new Rules:

- Quarterly Statement Rule
- Private Fund Audit Rule
- Adviser-Led Secondary Transaction Rule
- Restricted Activities Rule
- Preferential Treatment Rule

In addition to these new Rules, which are specific to private funds, the SEC also adopted amendments to the existing Compliance Rule for all registered investment advisers whether or not advising private funds.

Types of Advisers Exempt from the Private Fund Adviser Rules

In adopting the Private Fund Adviser Rules, the SEC provided an answer to an important question—what are the extraterritorial limits of the Rules as applied to non-U.S. advisers? The SEC clarified that the five new Private Fund Adviser Rules are much more limited in their application to an investment adviser that has its “principal office and place of business”^[2] outside of the United States and thus is an “offshore adviser,” basing its reasoning on its long-held position “of not applying substantive provisions of the Advisers Act to SEC-registered offshore advisers with respect to their offshore clients, including private fund clients.”^[3] Importantly, the SEC confirmed that this same principle applies to unregistered and exempt offshore advisers (including Exempt Reporting Advisers), and specifically clarified “the restricted activities rule and the preferential treatment rule do not apply to offshore unregistered advisers with respect to their offshore funds (regardless of whether the funds have U.S. investors).”^[4]

The new Rules do, however, still apply to any U.S. domiciled private funds (e.g., Delaware limited partnership) managed by an offshore adviser even if the fund has no U.S. investors.^[5] The following chart provides a basic overview of the types of private funds that fall within the scope of the new Rules:

U.S. Adviser or Offshore Adviser?	SEC Registration Status of Adviser	Domicile of Private Fund	Do the New Rules Apply?
U.S. Adviser	Registered	U.S.	Yes
U.S. Adviser	Registered	Offshore	Yes
U.S. Adviser	Unregistered/Exempt	U.S.	Yes
U.S. Adviser	Unregistered/Exempt	Offshore	Yes
Offshore Adviser	Registered	U.S.	Yes
Offshore Adviser	Registered	Offshore	No
Offshore Adviser	Unregistered/Exempt	U.S.	Yes

U.S. Adviser or Offshore Adviser?	SEC Registration Status of Adviser	Domicile of Private Fund	Do the New Rules Apply?
Offshore Adviser	Unregistered/Exempt	Offshore	No

Offshore advisers that manage both U.S. domiciled funds (to which the Rules apply) and offshore funds (to which the Rules do not) – particularly within the same fund structure – should consider the extent to which the application of the new Rules to U.S. domiciled funds implicate considerations such as fairness, operational parity and the expectations of investors in the offshore vehicles.

The SEC’s discussion of the extraterritorial application of the new Rules is certainly a welcome relief for offshore advisers. However, offshore advisers must assess how the new Private Fund Adviser Rules will affect their business should they currently, or in the future, manage a U.S. domiciled private fund.
